Personal

I have visited Korea every few years since childhood, but recent trips have made me long to live in Seoul and fully experience the culture of my heritage.

What fascinates me is the odd and sometimes unlikely harmony of Korean and Western influences living side by side, or even within each other.

Seoul constantly stirs to be an international city without losing its own powerful modern identity. An identity pounded by war and crafted by decades of struggle and sweat.

This is the interplay I see everywhere when I am in Seoul. It is frenetic, it is vibrant and it is uniquely Korea. I wish to explore this in far greater depth when I walk the streets of Seoul as a new member of society.
